

Who/why would one go about rejecting a grouting team?

A team with expired or missing certifications could certainly be rejected by the owner/inspection agency. It could also be possible that an owner/inspection agency could reject the grouting team for either poor performance or for failure to follow the project specifications. I've never heard of it happening yet - but it could, just as for any construction operation.